My dear Friend:

Thank you for your letter of 24 October and for the copy of the letter you attached to it. Your views expressed in this correspondence are of continuing interest to me and to close friends of mine. I assure you that they are being carefully considered in the appropriate places. In this time of fast moving events your judgments, based on a lifetime of experience, are most valuable to us.

I am distressed to learn that you have not been well recently and trust that the months of good air and sunshine will return you to your usual good health.

With all the best wishes to you and the I am
